Alfonso Aguirre

Alfonso Aguirre is a writer, entrepreneur, and content creator. Right after he graduated college from the University Tecnológico de Monterrey, he published his first book Imposible hasta que se hace, which quickly positioned itself on the list of best sellers on Amazon Mexico in the Leadership category.

He currently has a community of over 1.7 million people on TikTok where he shares entrepreneurship tips, book recommendations, motivational phrases, and personal experiences. With the support of this great community, his podcast “Alfonso Aguirre” has positioned itself on the trend charts on Spotify. In addition, he connects with a select group of people on a daily basis to carry out the 5 a.m. club routine.

He is the CEO and Co-founder of “By the land”, an herbal supplement company, which achieved a valuation of millions of pesos thanks to the exponential growth in sales generated by his social networks and the support of his digital community.

While all this is happening, Alfonso has adopted the phrase “Have your own projects for breakfast, lunch, and dinner”, putting it into practice with each of his plans and making an allusion to the importance of dedicating yourself to yourself and your ideas.

DARE TO COMPETE. When everything is at stake, Mateo and Gabriel will dare to take a more difficult step than achieving the highest grades, obtaining the best job, or even changing the world: discovering that love gives more meaning to success.

Mateo García is a successful student of International Relations with a life planned, he believes, to perfection: graduating from Columbia, working at the United Nations and saving the world one treaty at a time. He has everything so calculated that he stays away from any distraction, but one day he meets Gabriel Cortez, a philanthropist who is passionate about changing the world.

Mateo joins this charismatic boy's foundation and discovers that it is not just a simple job, but something extraordinary. Together they will discover that the most important victories are not won on the stage, but in those moments when everything seems lost.

Press for Nothing Was What We Expected

«Nada fue lo que creímos, [Alfonso's] first novel, talks about how you face the biggest challenges better when you find the person who will walk with you. Many times, what scares us the most isn't losing, but winning something so big that it changes who you are forever.»

Mónica Maristain

«Nada fue lo que creímos is a book that invites us to reflect on life, our emotions, and our personal journeys. With his characteristic introspective style, the author Alfonso Aguirre submerges us on a journey of autodiscovery through stories, reflections, and experiences that defy our own perceptions and beliefs.»

Rayo Guzmán

Rayo Guzmán was born in Celaya, Guanajuato. She has a degree in Communication and an MA in Education in Human Development and Thanatology. From a very young age her passion for reading led her to be a writer.

For more than 18 years she dedicated herself to teaching at higher-education and postgraduate level, to counseling and accompaniment in Human Development, and as a facilitator in various institutions in Mexico.

In 2006 she obtained an honorable mention in the literary contest of the Demac Publishing House, with an autobiographical text entitled En mis cinco sentidos. Since then, she has dedicated herself to writing stories that, with her agile narrative, give life to endearing characters and leave a mark on her readers.

Eloisa, a rebellious, free, and indomitable journalist from Guanajuato, México, is about to marry her childhood friend when she meets a Serbian man from a wealthy family named Darko. Together they develop a predestined passionate connection due to a curse that connects their respective ancestors. However, Darko turns to violence and Eloisa is forced to return to Guanajuato. There, she discovers that she is pregnant and later gives birth to a son named Zoran, the "Balkan Coyote." The story revolves around Zoran's reunion with his father, and the reunion of his parents, Eloisa and Darko. A story that appears to be about romantic love turns into a haunting narration about the relation between your ancestry and forgiveness.

«Rayo Guzmán has developed a vibrant story where each character is a life project. She doesn't show disdain for the chiaroscuro, on the contrary, she displays it in such a way that we become witnesses of the dreams and the disenchantment of everyone.»

Élmer Mendoza

«With a dream-like narrative but with feet firmly planted in reality, Coyote balcánico is the story of a fractured family, the consequences of this division, and the journey of a son to connect the pieces of his identity.»

After a plane crash, Julieta and Daniel are reincarnated in another world; her, as Kouzel, abandoned as a child in the forest of the barbarians; him as Novak, the eldest son of the leader of the ice territory, a hunter obsessed with exterminating all sorcerers. Kouzel does not know that she was born with the most dangerous magic on The Second Earth and that her nightmares contain the truth about the life that she shared with her great love. But when she meets Novak again, he doesn't recognize her. With the help of Nickza, a wild felux with an inexplicable connection to her; a seer, and an animal magician, she must try to make sense of her visions not only to discover who she was in another land, but also who she is now. On the other hand, the most powerful blood mage on The Second Earth knows of her awakening and will do everything he can to incite her darkness. With Kouzel on his side, he will seek revenge and start a war against his greatest enemies: the hunters.

Press for Blood Sorceress

«In a world where fantasy and reality intertwine, Maga de Sangre emerges as a story that goes beyond conventional romances. With an encompassing narrative and an atmosphere charged with mystery, this novel immerses us in a love story that defies death, destiny, and darkness itself.»

Excelsior

«It is with stories such as Maga de sangre that we prove an eternal truth: that, when talking about humans, hatred is fabricated while love is part of our nature.»

Augusto loses his father and becomes his mother's companion until she dies. He decides to move to Tlacotalpan and, for the first time, he begins to pay attention to women. There, he meets a young Ukrainian woman with whom he begins a friendship. They spend their days together while she stands by the river, waiting for her boyfriend. On the day he asks her to give him a chance, the boyfriend comes back to take her with him. Years later, Augusto gets sick and now, in his dying agony, he cannot tell fantasy from reality. Originally, the author conceived this story as a cinematographic script, which he directed as well. It was released in 2015, starring Aislinn Derbez and Flavio Medina. It obtained two "Diosas de Plata", a cinematographic award granted to the best Mexican films.

Press

«A story of unrequited love that invites you to reflect on the freedom of being yourself and the impossibility of it.»

Aislinn Derbez

«The characters experience a real connection even though the circumstances don't allow them to be physically united, just like in real life. We connect without knowing what's next but the connection is forever.»

Carmina talks to the dead since she was a child. She lives in a world of darkness where the regret and the desire for her revenge kept her in the depths of a dead house, haunted by feelings as dark as the coal that can be found in the mines of Coahuila.

In a mantel, she embroiders the names of the Calderón family, who she hates, with black hair. In the center of it, the name of El Cura stands out, a priest from her past whose name she does not deem worth even mentioning.

When her sister Ada dies, she has no other option than to turn to her past, meet up with her relatives, and try to reconstruct her story. On the other hand, the death of various miners in Pasta de Conchos brings up in Bernardo, Carmina's nephew, the memories of poverty and the anger of injustice that he will try to reconstruct through his work as a journalist.

In this novel, Mónica Castellanos retraces the journeys to hell, including the personal ones, like Carmina's and Bernardo's, as well as those of the miners who died due to the negligence of many and who, once again, were buried in the shadows.

Press for Red Coal

«Carbón rojo is a novel that burns. A burning edge that goes straight to the memory. Its precise prose manages to inform, while generating a feeling against oblivion.»

Élmer Mendoza

«The novel is permeated with pain, and Mónica Castellanos works the setting in such a way that it feels natural and the reader can unfold in the story as a sort of witness.»

Ivana Lamas / Informador

«Carbón rojo is an enclave where two stories converge: that of Carmina and her grudges, her past and her family, especially Bernardo, her great-nephew, who finds in Pasta de Conchos the beginning of his journalistic career, as well as those of the miners who lost their lives and those who survived.»

Daniel de la Fuente / Reforma

«Mónica Castellanos is beyond a doubt a novelist of the first category who knows how to create characters, who creates a dramatic feeling in her stories and that shares with us titles that can endure any kind of criticism.»

El aroma de los anhelos (The Scent of Longing)

During the time of Porfirio Díaz' rule, the population's dissatisfaction and restlessness grew bigger and bigger. Different groups opposed to Díaz began to organize to challenge the president, and among them, a group led by Francisco L. Madero. The "Maderistas" would then position themselves in different parts of Mexico and southern United States, specifically in San Antonio, Texas, a key point for the fight.

María, only 15 years old at the time, was a young woman with a revolutionary spirit who wanted to escape her privileged social standing to promote women's suffrage, participate in politics, and dedicate her life to those who were in the utmost need for help.

The writings of Práxedes G. Guerrero published in the newspaper Regeneración and Los miserables by Victor Hugo would instill that audacity and drive in her. But it would not be an easy task: her mother's care and social customs, together with the restrictions of being a woman, would make her face many different obstacles.

However, fate is turned upside down when she meets a young doctor who recently arrived in San Antonio, Daniel Chapman. Soon, he will become a confidant and friend, as a powerful bond binds them together.

Press for The Scent of Longing

«Mónica Castellanos publishes her novel with the intention of giving women the place they deserve when they have been left aside, among the shadows, even if it allows the construction of a better society with her work and daily labor. Through the character of María Treviño, a young woman about to turn 16, the author pays homage to the women who, from the industry, the factories, the field and the home, have worked and forged contemporary Mexico.»

José Pablo Espíndola / Reporte Índigo

«Great author, Mónica Castellanos, gifted us with a delicious story that takes place at the beginning of the Mexican revolution. With her particular style, it takes us to the cities where plans were made in order to take down the dictator Porfirio Díaz.»

These are the days of Franco and Hitler. Among the thousands of refugees from the Spanish Civil War, two young Catalans, Guillermina Giralt and Francesc Planchart, will live one of the most moving stories in their attempt to survive the French internment camp in Argelès-sur-Mer. But they will not be the only ones. Thousands of men, women and children, intellectuals, artists, peasants, workers, will leave their homes, face inhuman conditions of life and fight to preserve the most precious thing they have: their lives.

In that uncertain future a man will emerge, the Mexican consul Gilberto Bosques who, risking his life and his family's, will be detained by the Gestapo and go beyond his diplomatic functions to save thousands of people from the most cruel and harrowing persecution in history.

Press for The Hours Taken from Us

«The prose and masterful narrative structure give to the book a sense of agile reading, leaving the reader eager to know more about Gilberto Bosques, accomplishing what I have always considered to be the effect of a good historical novel: take the reader on a path that will make him wish to know more about history.»

Conjurando Letras

«The novel allows us to know, through the beautifully narrated short chapters, the background of Don Gilberto, his love for education, language, and journalism; his revolutionary spirit. In the course of 331 pages —that slide away like water— we meet the teacher, diplomatic, communicator, father, and friend, and we understand the fear, sadness, suffering, and despair of many exiles through the voice of different characters along the novel that Mónica builds with mastery.»

Karla Trejoluna / Es lo cotidiano

«In her book Aquellas horas que nos robaron, Mónica Castellanos shares with us the endearing story of resistance and strength of an extraordinary Mexican man that challenged over and over again the laws of the state to attend to the right we all have to enjoy a dignified future and freedom.»

In the fifties, Raquel and Alejo live the most wonderful love story, but it is a secret. Because of his prejudice, Raquel's father is opposed to their relationship. One fateful day, they are discovered, awakening her father's anger, which makes him decide to punish the young lovers. The forced separation is imminent; Alejo ends up in the Peruvian Amazon while Raquel seeks asylum with her grandmother in Paris.

Within the best tradition of Latin American novel, Mariana García Luna brings us into an oneiric universe where, alongside Raquel and Alejo; Carmina, Nana and Santiago will join their fates, many years later, thanks to a mysterious wedding dress. Each of these characters will narrate the story from their perspectives, one of them doing so from the realm of the dead in the shape of a ghost wandering through the rainforest.

Press for The Scent of Orchids

«It is not a love story in the proper sense of the word. It does deal with love, but with love in all its manifestations and in an idyllic and utopic world that is born in the Amazonian. »

Rocío Hernández

«Using an endearing and playful prose, the author astounds with a novel that is both a journey through the world and through the human condition. »

HarperCollins

«This book is addressed to any man or woman who wants to fall in love again, who wants to feel hopeful, who wants to have faith, who wants to be inspired; to those people who are interested in magical realism and in the Latin-American novel. »

Rubén Pablo Alcocer is a 54-year-old private detective who lives in Saltillo. He could have been a philosopher, and perhaps that would have been better for him, since his most recent job has taken him to an extremely complicated situation: a man and a woman have tied him to a chair. They also placed a plastic bag over his head and stuck toothpicks under his nails. His kidnappers want to know where the old diamond necklace is, the one that once belonged to the Rumanian crown. To endure the torture, Rubén will reminisce about the jewel's story, which goes back to the 15th century, and passes through the lives of several European dynasties, where Napoleon, the Queen Victoria, and even the Count Dracula are involved. Walking through this labyrinth of stories might be the key to eluding death.

This fascinating tale, which is both a thriller and a historical novel, reminds us that every family has its jewels, its rocks, and different types of people which together form a mosaic of love, betrayal, and desire. But also, of memory and loss. Sometimes, even of a desire to forget.

Press for The Family Jewels

«With great delicacy he leads us through the labyrinths of history and the mind, and page after page he presents us with exciting events, at times like a dizzying thriller, and at others, like a profound explosion of human nature.»

Guillermo Arriaga

«By reading this novel, the reader will be left with various reflections and information about the real lives of those who apparently would be thought to be great; however, the reality is always different and contains endless difficulties.»

Elena Hernández / El Diario de Coahuila

«Joyas de la familia is a novel full of anecdotes, and delusions, not only in its plot, but also in its conception. The most recent book by the Saltillo writer Sergio Avilés took 30 years to reach its publication, but with it comes a journey through a maze in the history of a valuable object.»

In a dystopic world where Luis Donaldo Colosio, a presidential candidate who was assassinated in 1994, is president of Mexico, and Jorge Luis Borges is a Nobel prize winner, the mandatory signs an agreement to end the conflict that had divided Mexico into the Republic of the North and a military dictatorship in the South. But that truce trembles when, in a church, a nun is found murdered and covered by the flag of Ozymandias: the rebel group that blew up the country. The investigator Séneca Espejel discovers that, in that same church, his mother's remains have been stolen. What role did his parents, particularly his father, an ex-senator, play in the peace agreements? And in the war? And how is it all related to the nun who was once a guerrilla fighter and who seems to be linked to a mysterious cult?

In a country fractured by fanaticisms, knowing someone's real name is knowing which side of history they were in... In Conocerán tu verdadero nombre -Luis García-Manríquez' first novel-, «historical violence intertwines with personal memory and family trauma with the impossible question: what is left of us when even our name becomes a battlefield?», Pedro Ángel Palou.

«A secret was suddenly revealed by Ligia’s grandmother: your great-great-grandfather held a high role in the Church’s hierarchy and he got a young girl pregnant, your great-great-grandmother Josefa. The scandal was such that Josefa had to move away from Spain to Nicaragua. The rumour was extremely painful for a family with deep Catholic roots. The truth could not be spoken out loud due to their fear of God, until Ligia took this beast composed by rumours and transformed it into a work of fiction. Ligia aired that family wound by reworking the possible story into a magnificent novel. There is a bit of everything: reflections about abuse, jealousy, confusion, death, but at the same time, joy, will to live, love, solidarity. There are no victims, nor villains. Ligia presents the human condition with its paradoxes, contradictions, and revenge. Narrated like the great novels of the 19th century, here the events happen one after the other.

Por mi gran culpa moves, excites, amuses, angers, makes us laugh, opens worlds, confronts us, and takes us on a journey through the great river that is the human experience.».

It is the year 1666 and Saloniki is part of the vast Ottoman Empire. A figure threatens to provoke the largest schism in the history of the Jewish diaspora since Jesus: Sabbatai Zevi, known by many as The Messiah. This prophet is being watched by the Turkish authorities, but it is the rabbis who order his arrest. Immersed in this commotion, Ana Blanco and José Galante are forced to flee the city along with their families, leaving their love story in a halt and knowing that a tragedy bigger than exile is on the horizon.

The lives of Yago Galante and Hans Bauer cross in 1904, in Krakow. Despite their different origins, a friendship between them blossoms almost immediately. Hans invites Yago to participate in his business: trading souls, meaning to hire and displace workers all over Europe. Years pass and the business is thriving, they specialize in the supposed aptitudes of each town. Data falls in the wrong hands. A terrible blind hatred slowly appears from behind the story.

Los vendedores de almas is a novel about the echoes of time, about doubles that deny their reflection. Alejandro Paez Varela has written a narration of the thorough formation of evil, in the hearts of people and in history. But also, and above all, about the luminous affirmation that love -between friends, parents and sons, and lovers- endures and saves us all.

Press for The Sellers of Souls

«Alejandro Paéz Varela not only reconfigures the past, but he recreates a political and emotional atmosphere between the Jewish communities of Greece, Germany, and Poland. Respecting the documentary veracity and the truth in fiction, he knits a story of migrations, changes, and impostures that have been marked by the iron of racism, religious intolerance, and xenophobia.»

Madrid, 1599. Following her mother's sudden death, fifteen-year-old Isabel goes to live in the family home of her father, the poet and war hero Miguel de Cervantes, a man she has never met. Forced to pose as a maid to conceal her illegitimate status, Isabel must adapt to a new way of life with her jealous cousin and protective aunts while she waits for her father to return from Seville. Meanwhile, in the nearby town of Esquivias, Miguel's pious and faithful wife Catalina similarly awaits his return, blissfully unaware of Isabel's existence.

As Miguel works on the manuscript that will become his masterpiece, Don Quixote, the years pass and Isabel grows into womanhood, falling in and out of love, uncovering family secrets, and yearning for the legitimacy denied her by a rigid and callous society. Capturing two tumultuous decades of Golden Age Spain in rich historical detail, Martha Bátiz paints a compassionate portrait of a family on the precipice of great change and the fiercely independent woman at its centre striving to make a life of her own.

Press for A Daughter's Place

«A moving novel that describes with extraordinary intimacy and accuracy the exciting and difficult lives of the women who surrounded Cervantes.»

Rosa Montero

«While Miguel de Cervantes was creating the knight-errant whose name no one can forget, the women of his family were waging their own battles against the suffocating weight of honour and the darkness of the Golden Age. With a fabulous literary touch, on the loom of the best historical novel, Martha Bátiz makes these women feel alive, vibrant, recovered, unforgettable.»

Irene Vallejo

«In highlighting the intelligence and resilience of her main characters, Bátiz challenges the myth of the solitary male genius. [...] Bátiz makes visible the women whom history has rendered invisible. In portraying their desires, grievances, and inner landscapes, the novel restores depth and dignity to these marginalized figures. A remarkable achievement, A Daughter's Place encourages us to rethink the conditions that allow writerly genius to thrive.»

Lara El Mekoui / Literary Review of Canada

«Impressive and impeccably researched, it's rife with life's wisdom.»

After several romantic failures and the fortuitous discovery of artificial flavors, Mexican journalist Adalberto Pérez assumes the harsh certainty that Nothing is true. He embarks on a frantic search to uncover all the lies that surround him, but misfortunes never fly alone, and his disillusionment seems to become infinite: in the news, gastronomy, sports, politics, laws, and even the weather forecast. Adalberto must rethink the very meaning of his life.

We often believe that there is only one Truth with a capital T, as an infallible cure for all our pains and wounds, but the true remedy to face them is usually nothing more than fiction. At least that is what Adalberto discovers when he meets Alicia Covarrubias, a Spanish woman who has never and will never lie. Together they will try to deal with all the falsehoods of reality and thus define their shared real Truth.

Press for Alice Never Lies

«This farewell to Madrid is jubilant and very fun, from an overflowing imagination that may confuse the reader over what is true and what is false. But the narrative allows us to ignore the anxiety that this constant doubt can produce. And convince the reader that if there is love, you can live in doubt.»

El Sol de México

«And so we find, with the acid humour and erudition that are characteristic of the author, a story that explores the relevance of the Truth in our contemporary context where what is apparent seems certain: news, food, consumables, materials, adverts, images, articles, gossip, declarations, history itself, etc.»

Langosta Literaria

«Alicia nunca miente is a brilliant and fun novel that questions certainties and celebrates fiction as the most powerful remedy against pain. With irony, tenderness, and a sharp prose, Jorge F. Hernández invites us to rethink what truth means, and how literature can save us again and again.»

Orange blossom water can also dance like smoke from insomnia or timeless after-dinner conversation. This is how the friendship at first sight between the French diplomat Xavier Dupont and the writer he asked to write the novel about the life of his mother, Catalina, is born.

Catalina, born in Cochabamba, daughter of a Bolivian mogul, knows she is the most beautiful woman in the world; a fact that is confirmed after she is sent to Paris. There, she will float on tinsel clouds, she will be surrounded by luxuries, and she will befriend the likes of Coco Chanel, Edith Piaf, and Albert Camus. She will become la plus belle femme of Paris, and the protagonist of what would be a fairy tale, if it wasn't a true story. A rogue novel born from long after-dinner conversations that will enchant the readers like only an intimate celebration could.

Press for Cochabamba

«Cochabamba is, to a large extent, a sybaritic novel full of smells, textures and flavors; from Veracruz-style snapper to chiles en nogada and for dessert chongos zamoranos, the smoke of cigars and shots of tequila, whiskey or cognac. After-meal that becomes an eternal return of the same but stripped of all angst, delighted by the very pleasant company.»

Reforma

«Jorge F. Hernández presents his new novel Cochabamba, which tells the story of Catalina Equis, who knew she was 'the most beautiful woman on the planet'. The author affirms that his new work is a tribute to Paris and to exemplary couples, such as Gabriel García Márquez and Mercedes Marcha.»

José Pablo Espíndola

«The formula of this novel has all the classic ingredients of a princess story: a young and beautiful protagonist, who leaves her humble origins to start a new life in high society and where she eventually meets the love of her life.»

The narrator dives into the childhood he lived in Mantua, a forest near Washington D.C. A chronicle of memories that ignited the slow recovery of his mother's memory; May begins to remember some words that are names, the order of things, the disorder, things left to chance ... the trees of a forest. The narrator's childhood is the passage to recover his mother's past and the novel weaves these fragments like someone who spins syllables over the snow of blank pages. Jorge F. Hernandez recreates the first fifteen years of his bilingual biography amid a forest that has remained intact in a shared memory and where the reader is suspended in the presence of the terrible enigma of Evil, of the worst side of the North American utopia, which is only alleviated by affections that last forever ... and that do not deserve to be forgotten.

Press for A Floating Forest

«The literature of Jorge F. Hernández is very autobiographical. Not because his life is in the stories, but because it feeds on a personal and a collective memory when it approaches favorable territories to show its ghosts, obsessions, or desires.»

Jesús Alejo Santiago / Milenio

«Un bosque flotante is more than a book of memories; it is also about the battle against oblivion, the recovery of remembrances, not just your own, but of others.»

Adriana Hernández Morales / Periodismo Hoy

«Months after turning 30, a thrombosis in her brain erased the memory of May, the mother of Jorge F. Hernández. Many years later, in front of the platoon of a keyboard, he would sit down to write the story of his childhood, which is also the story of the ‘slow recovery of May’s memory’.»

Ángel Soto / Milenio

«Jorge F. Hernández goes back to the forest of his childhood and leaves a testimony of the teacher who accompanies him in his first letters and readings, of the never-failing friend with whom he conquers all the paths amidst trees and shrubs, there where the American dream can also become a nightmare. Pages of a life that does not deserve forgetting.»

A daughter finds a rift in her family: her parents are separated and the house where she and her siblings are growing up is becoming increasingly populated by memories. In June 2006, the father of Karina--the protagonist of this story--leads a social struggle to topple Oaxaca's government and seek justice. A battle that brings along the stigma of prison. A fight that leaves the city burning.

While dealing with her father's abandonment and social persecution, Karina tries to figure out who she has been and who she is now as a woman. She pushes the roadblocks in her memory to reach the past, her unstable and sorrowful childhood: the dark zone from which the long shadow of a totemic father emerges. In this, her second novel, Karina Sosa amplifies her stylistic talent and gives us a deep, nostalgic, hurt story. A book where she courageously subdues words such as love and freedom. Orphaned asks: Can you dig deep and come out unharmed? And it answers: No way.

Press for Orphanhood

«With an intimate and heartbreakingly beautiful style, Karina Sosa offers a privileged, yet painful testimony of one of the social movements that shaped the face of contemporary Mexico.»

Fernanda Melchor

«This book is proof that you can trust your own powers. And of course you do not come out unscathed, but you do come out full of words that expose yourself: the wounds fester between words: from there comes the suffering human condition, what unites us to others.»

Pura López-Colomé

«Like (Elena) Ferrante, Sosa is interested in power relations and the emotional burden that parents impose on their children.»

Daniel López Aguilar / La jornada

«Karina is not a historian, nor a social scientist; she tries to narrate or transmit to us her legitimate experience, but at the same time she deals with a lived history that is already part of the collective memory.»

Guillermo Fadanelli

«Without affectations or drama, without exaltation or pathos, without sentimentality and much less pamphleteering temptations, with a surreptitious, sly humor, common among some Oaxacans, in Orfandad, the book recently published by Random House, Karina Sosa has risked recreating the memories of those days of barricades, of struggle, of resistance, of prison.»

In a room in the city of Oaxaca, a young female architect writes and reads the diaries that she has accumulated in the span of ten years. It has been six hundred days since her mother died. The only thing Ka knows about her mother is that she had a mental illness and that she loved horses. Leonora, her mother, has always been a ghost to her.

Ka goes looking for her own story while she adapts to being back in the city, to her new job, to the streets, to love, and to the libraries. At the same time, she starts to find out more about the life of her mother and her love for horses. Leonora is a blank space, a mystery that Ka will try to answer with a writing that oscillates between her memories, quotes, and literary references. Throughout a patient and crystalline prose, this novel ponders over absence, lies, solitude, family narratives, and the capacity of human beings to tell stories that give them identity and a place in the world.

Press for Ghost Horse

«It is a novel, but it is also a journal and an essay about fiction. The story stems from fragments with a paused and intimate writing. The narrative voice is a young architect who is passionate about literature and whose mother died almost two years ago.»

Aristegui noticias

«The story manages to build a peculiar world and atmosphere that sticks to your skin even if you have closed the book.»

Jury of the First Novel Award 2021

«The novel acquires the shape of a library where personal experiences and art coexist »

Roberto Pliego / Milenio

«One of the most powerful elements of the novel is how it builds this inquiry, how it articulates the search for the ghost, and how it narrates it. And there it is the poetic labour, the manner in which it administrates what is said and what is kept quiet, the manner in which it strains the borders of what is narrated and what is not told.»

Hernán Ronsino / Rialta Magazine

«Of fragmentary structure, an evocative, poetic, and oneiric style. »

In a Veracruz besieged by crime and corruption, where being a journalist has become a dangerous profession, Santiago Becerril does not know whether he should stay away from dangerous activities while taking care of his sick mother, or go find those responsible for the murder of his mentor, Amanda González, who at the time of her death was carrying out an investigation that implicated the Secretary of Security in hundreds, perhaps thousands, of forced disappearances. He decides to pursue the truth and, when he enters the depths of the failed State, he records the changes of a once joyful and glowing city and region, which is now threatening to its defenseless population; as demonstrated by the collectives of “madres buscadoras” (mothers seeking their disappeared children), the numerous victims, and the scares witnesses willing to share information. Supported by an ex-partner who he still loves, he follows his intuition and his mentor’s notebooks.

Press for Crocodiles

«Velasco took on the task of showing the difficult situation of the journalists who work in Veracruz, the state, as she mentions in the novel, with the highest number of deaths of journalists in the country. Velasco’s affections towards her hometown are clear, whose culinary delights and beautiful landscapes appear constantly. On the other hand and in the same way, it is evident how the pain caused by all the violence has modified the life of its inhabitants.»

Magali watches over every single detail, every movement her characters make, especially Montserrat Montero, the character that glues everything together; a woman that at times is divided. She is an orphan, a bisexual lover who has had an abortion and who designs jewelry.

At this age, she has an epiphany that may be of use for the rest of her life, after growing up, hesitating, loving, drinking beer, wine, desiring, studying, drinking coffee, and always regarding herself as an incomplete being.

Press for Cherries in Paris

«Magali is a crafty narrator in the way in which she handles the tension, in the way in which she creates the atmosphere where her narrative takes place, in the way in which she uses the language of her time and creates a character from the very moment of her birth to the moment she turns thirty years old.»

Élmer Mendoza

«It is a novel that provokes a deep feeling of empathy for its characters. The reader will want to get closer to Montserrat and to know more about that mysterious being that is Maria, about the sweet intelligence of grandma Celia and about the huge house they all grow up in.»

AVC noticias

«There are several transversal themes that shape the whole novel, although there are three that are emphasized: family, love and individuality. Albeit these themes are recurrent in most literature, Cerezas en París does not stem from commonplaces; instead, it explores these themes parting from different possibilities of Montserrat's personal bonds.»

A town is about to disappear under water due to the construction of a dam. The people working for the Government try to convince Violeta to leave the house where she grew up with her grandmother. But she refuses to leave all of her dead behind: her recently deceased grandmother; her mother, who took her own life after Violeta was born; and her daughter, who died during childbirth. «Suzette Celaya Aguilar is an author with a powerful inner world that translates into a novel that often takes our breath away. He builds his story with a language that smells of dust, bones, sweat, with a deep poetic sense. It is worth getting closer to the power of this writer, a unique voice in the panorama of literature in Spanish.»

«Although Nosotras is not a strictly feminist novel, it addresses issues of machismo and the role of women in a patriarchal society. Celaya wanted women to be the protagonists, exploring the complexities of their relationships and power dynamics.»

Ever since he heard it on a night out in Lisbon, the narrator has become obsessed with the story of Santiago's father, Pol Espasí, a Catalan exiled in Portugal during the Spanish Civil War; who died leaving a trail of questions related to various documents linked to the smuggling of art pieces and a Nazi spy network.

Through a series of investigations, the protagonist and Santiago intend to unravel the mystery surrounding the death of the possible spy, his involvement with German agents during World War II, and the unusual literary life of the narrator's great-grandfather, who wrote an alternate version of Don Quixote, comparing his delusions with those of the ingenious nobleman. Revealing these mysteries will confront the two friends with a reality that they may not be prepared to face.

«The story immerses itself in these scenes of German spies and agents in the Second World War, but it also covers the life of the narrator—who has a lot and little of Riveroll—and the memories he has about the life of his great-grandfather and his text about the ingenious gentleman Don Quixote of la Mancha.»

Sin Embargo

«Juan Patricio Riveroll tells a story that runs in different cities and at different times, going from Lisbon to Mexico City and from the first look of the 20th century in Mexico to the Portugal of the Second World War, in a plot that combines the smuggling of pieces of art and a Nazi spy network with an alternate version of Don Quixote.»

Mexico, 1954. After abandoning a Guatemala beaten by the armed intervention of the CIA, Ernesto, a young Argentinian doctor, crosses the border to Chiapas on his way to Mexico City. He works as a photographer, salesman, and as security officer in order to bring food to the table. His time in the Mexican capital transforms him each day and leads him to reencounter Hilda Gadea. She is one of his greatest loves and soon they start living together in a small apartment in la colonia Cuauthémoc. One night, Ernesto happens to meet Raul, a young Cuban who has just arrived in the country—fleeing from Cuba and from his brother Fidel.

This encounter will change the destiny of Ernesto as he will get involved in the plan of the Castro brothers to free Cuba. In Al Filo de la Revolución, Juan Patricio Riveroll forces us to look at an obscured period in the life of Ernesto Guevara: the key years in which the famous Latin American started to establish himself as a guerrillero and freedom fighter in order to become an icon of the world.

Verónica Langer

Verónica Langer was born in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1953. Her parents, of Viennese origin, came to Argentina as a result of the Second World War, persecuted for their ethnicity and ideology. She studied medicine in her hometown, a career she abandoned in 1974 when she emigrated to Mexico because of the threats she suffered from Triple A (The Argentine Anti-communist Alliance). She has lived in Mexico City ever since. She studied Acting at the National School of Theater Art and Hispanic Literature at UNAM.

She has been a constant presence in cinema, theater, and television in the last forty years and, in parallel to acting, she has dedicated herself to writing, many times performing her own shows. She has participated in more than sixty plays, among which are The Great Man, under the direction of the brilliant Julio Castillo; Easter by August Strindberg, directed by Héctor Mendoza; a monologue Alcira or the poetry in arms by Roberto Bolaño, The fair woman by Sándor Márai, among others. She was a regular cast member of the National Theater Company.

After being discharged, Aurelio is hired by "The Colony" to take care of four patients: Kiki, who can only say the word "ham"; Miguel, who has a tendency to take off his clothes at random times; an old man who never talks and who no one visits; and Paco, who only wants to sing and talk about his beautiful girlfriend. Aurelio writes in a journal as a part of his psychiatric treatment, and thanks to his daily entries we get to meet "The Larvae", as he calls them.

When there's a fair in town, Aurelio lies to convince Doctor Quesada to let them all go. His mission? Introducing the larvae to the pleasures of life by taking them to a brothel. However, three of them disappear that night, and with Kiki as his only companion, Aurelio will have to find them all so they can go back to "The Colony".

With a great sense of humor and an even greater amount of tenderness, Verónica Langer builds a world in which innocence frames the possibility of finding true friendship, love, and redemption.

«Learning to tolerate doubt, fear of the unknown and of different people is one of the lessons that actress Verónica Langer, author of Las Larvas, hopes to instill in people who read her first novel.»

Reforma

«The madman, a favorite creature among many others in both Western and Eastern literature, for the expressive freedom it grants to the writer to a much greater extent than those characters designed according to the tight waist of sanity, has a nuance in the creation of Verónica Langer. very well used to give an air of verisimilitude to his entire story.»

Letralia

«The narrative style of the work emerged naturally, establishing itself as the ideal voice to tell this very personal story. For the author, the main challenge was to maintain the balance between fiction and autobiographical intimacy, thus challenging the limits of her own narrative.»

Cielo Cruel is a generational novel that narrates the discovery of desire in three different women. Like an initiation journey, the desire to see the ocean for the first time will be for Mar, the daughter, a meeting point between passion and the lucidity of a sensual awakening. With a mixture of guilt and pleasure, her days will be occupied by her testing if her name truly carries a curse, a destiny that she will seek to break alongside Alejo, a man younger than her who will make her face her deepest fears.

On the other hand, Gloria, the mother, will transgress the meaning of marriage, by trying to live with both her husband and her best friend at the same time. And through the memory and reconstruction of violent episodes from the time after the Mexican Revolution, Grandma Belén will show the strength of a woman who knows how to love herself and who does not need a man to achieve fulfillment.

Three women, three different times, the same blood with which Maritza M. Buendía makes us question and rethink the idea of desire and the body among the winds of a sky that is, ultimately, cruel.

Press for Cruel Sky

«Three chained timelines at the border of carnal desire, sensuality, guilt, pleasure, and fear. The grandmother, Belén, shows her hunger for freedom; the mother, Gloria, breaks the traditional marriage code; and the daughter, Mar, is torn between doubt and enjoyment as she faces a sexual awakening. The author presents her readers with a novel that weaves three stories together as they unfold on the turbulent geographies of love.»

«Maritza M. Buendía is interested in erotic literature; that is, the kind of literature that centers around love, the one that is concerned with creating a poetic language.»

Merry MacMasters / La Jornada

Between January 2008 and March 2022, Álvaro Uribe faced cancer three times. The first time in his right lung; the second one, in 2018, in his prostate; and the third one in his left lung. Álvaro won the first two rounds but lost the battle after the third encounter.

Each time, he kept a diary which not only compiled the vicissitudes of the disease but also cemented the lucid inventory of his hopes and anxieties. This book gathers those three journals.

Álvaro Uribe writes with pure honesty and transparency about the fear, the sadness, the anger, the tiredness, and the sleepless nights. He writes about the otherness that the disease pushed him into. He also writes about the reencounters with friendships, with literature itself, and, especially, about the love and shared existence with his wife, Tedi López Mills.

Tríptico del Cangrejo is proof that Álvaro Uribe's life and his writing were a single unit. He wrote until his last day; he was convinced that the same fate that had placed him in the worst-case scenario had given him the "inalienable relief of writing".

Press for The Crab's Triptych

«It is not surprising that even here, or especially here, a few meters from death, Álvaro has persisted in his usual behavior and has taken care of the commas and the verbs and the adjectives and has endorsed that commitment of his, so his, to the phrase, paragraph, page, book.»

Rafael Lémus

«Álvaro's last book was a diary, the one about his death, an overwhelming, sad book, but no less intelligent and profound in search of the transparency that nothingness offers.»

Los que no (Those Who Did Not)

Los que no narrates the broken saga of a generation of characters who did not reach the goal of becoming who they wanted to be. On the contrary, they steered further away as time went by. This group of friends, or sort of, met in school and then were united by their interest in literature and music, the various quintessential adolescent rites of passage —alcohol, drugs, and sex— and the admiration for a teacher who would become their guide, among other things, to get lost forever. The narrator, who at times is mistaken as the author, is also a part of that mismatched group, whose members are tied by invisible strings of love, envy, and illness.

Press for Those Who Did Not

«He takes the reader in a back-and-forth narrative that is only one of the premises of the novel, since he also manages to submerge the reader in a different narrative dynamic in which the protagonist mixes his own anecdotes with the ones from the other characters to reveal what he truly lived, what he believes to remember, and how he would have liked to act.»

El Informador

«In his narratives, he undresses his characters in a brutal manner, showing their meanness, fickleness, frivolities and, at the same time, their tenderness, lack of love, and rejection they suffer. »

Geney Beltrán

«Narrator-essayist submerged in reflexive stillness and drawn by the crossroads of fabulation from a way of looking at pressing and compassionate dispositions of creatures that take the risk to jump to unforeseen events while searching, perhaps, some commiseration under the forecasts of misfortune.»

«Most people do not get to become and to do everything they might have been or done. Almost everyone reaches half or three quarters of the path they might have trodden entirely. Expectations were cut short not because of guilt, action or neglect of each character, but because unpredictable accidents completely changed the course of a life. They may have had an extremely dramatic and drastic effect on it.»

Reyes Martínez Torrijos / La Jornada

«It is a magnificent book that combines the genre of the formative novel with his memoirs, a story of stories, of multiple voices, in which the narrator insisted on, as he did in all his other books, revealing himself, on unfolding, sharing and exploring himself.»

Yanet Aguilar / El Universal

«Álvaro Uribe is not only capable of containing those lives in a nutshell, but he also transforms them into models of the promising youth who gave in their talent, or their charisma, or both, to the temptation of failure.»

Mariano is headed to the adventure of his dreams: running uphill with his motorcycle, in the company of his friends and singing out loud as the engines roar. However, as his bliss begins, Mariano and a group of other people get kidnapped. The criminals hurt and humiliate all of their victims and demand large amounts of money as ransom. Slowly, all the victims are released; all except for Mariano, who will not believe what he must do in order to survive.

The long walk from where he is taken to the place in which he is held captive makes Mariano remember something that his mind had kept locked away: an abuse he suffered as a child, of which he had never spoken. Until now. Thus, he finds himself to be twice captured: once physically, and once emotionally.

El corredor is the howl of metal and literature, whose best feature is that it takes the reader to a paroxysm. That characteristic exaltation of the dervishes and of pilots whose bolide is envisioning, in a matter of seconds, the wall in which they could crash, the fire in which they would be torn apart by gears. Alejandro Vázquez Ortiz has managed to write a chrome plated narrative mechanism with several coats of painting where violence and despair coexist, where vertigo and void are the only certainties. Burned oil, endless highways that shine like the bright red desert, an embankment of gravel and concrete occupied by cars, blood, and pain.

Press for The Racer

«Even if the novel is not science fiction, it does share a few of its ideas, which places it within a more realistic tradition of the genre and explores the relationship between men and technology, and its impact in our lives. In the case of El corredor, we explore a type of violence contained inside the metal of a car's bodywork, one that cannot be stopped once it has been released, and it ends in a collision of fury, because, little by little the machinery takes over the humanity in an 'indubitable mediation' between technology and life, which starts to erase the idea of the human being.»

Christian García / Zócalo

«The book is part of a metaphor because, in the end, that is what scrap metal is, and the representation of these characters who are left aside, forgotten, marginalized, is as well the personification of the character turned into waste, into something no one cares about, into someone who needs to search for his way to survive.»

Yanet Aguilar / El Universal

«The violence portrayed in El corredor is a structural violence, accepted, quotidian.»

Daniel de la Fuente / Reforma

«The result is a wide range of stories interwoven by the adrenaline behind the steering-wheel, one that ties its characters due to a complicated social structure in which they exercise violence 'without any sort of restraint when they think they have to'.»

This novel is made of stories with different perspectives that make and shape each of the characters. We attend the decisive moment in the life of a family going through a summer that glides in an unsettling manner, revealing the secrets that each of them keeps. Secrets that confront them and force them to grow. With each chapter, we add up clues to complete an existential puzzle, where each character has his or her fraction of guilt and innocence. All of it is taken from the imagination and the certainties of two girls who begin to discover how to differentiate the world from fantasy.

At a travelling fair, Maricarmen, the eldest of two sisters, has her fortune read by a serpent-woman; the resulting prophecy is both cryptic and frightening. From that point onwards, the sisters' lives and the lives of those close to them, start circling around a real-life boa who lurks around their neighborhood, and the haunting apparition of a woman.

«With this title, Cecilia Eudave dives once more into the novelistic genre, without putting aside the brevity she is so fond of, since this book is more of a nouvelle. She weaves once more the threads of the amazement and the unusual into her ars poetica, where the amazing is present in every action of the characters, as well as fate and the sentence of a past and future that are labyrinth-like, with secrets that must be revealed and destinies that must be fulfilled.»

Alberto González / Nexos

«The novel's motif is family and, although it is not the main theme, it is always present since Cecilia Eudave considers the family nucleus to be extremely important due to the fact that it is the place where every vice and virtue is generated, both personal and social.»

What does a photographer approached by a young woman on his computer, a woman who has forgotten the people in her life, a nondescript man searching for an extraordinary story, friends looking for a sinister bar, a policeman solving a brutal murder, twins harassed by an elusive presence, a married couple who accidentally hit a semi-human-looking bundle and a public accountant who, in order to hook up with a girl, appropriates an ancient prophecy to explain the appearance of the dark and deep holes scattered throughout the city, across the planet, have in common?

With her unusual narrative, Cecilia Eudave disturbs and makes the reader reach the end of their own fears as one more character, with stories full of strangeness, on the threshold, on that fine line that separates the real from the unusual, the reader has to decide on which side of the scale they want to be positioned.

Sara, the girl that Omar, an obsessed 19-year-old Bob Dylan fan, falls in love with. Sara, the Tragic Goddess who coincidentally has the same name as his idol's first wife. Sara, the ideal of purity and sordidness that takes Omar on a journey through obsession and orphanhood. Sara, the embodiment of all the stories that the protagonist wants to live in order to have "a real life," full of shit and joy, virtue and pain, love and hunger; a life outside his mind, far from his middle-class existence.

"...for me, smoke figures come out of his mouth, poems that I can shape as I see fit," says Omar at one point. And this transformation of reality into fiction leads him to confront himself, far from Mexico City, in New York.

Press for Goodbye Dylan

«The novel is clearly influenced by the beatnik generation and Kerouac's prose, that continuous flow of descriptive narration that takes the city as a metaphor and as one more character in the story. The author cites Bob Dylan's musical work as if it was a soundtrack that accompanies the reader.»

El Universal

«Agile structure, a rhythm that traps the reader, and the characters' building. It is an encounter between literature and music. An introduction into Mexico City's urban tribes.»

Jury of the Mauricio Achar Award 2016

«Adios a Dylan is the story of an Omar who embarks on an adventure, who is always trying to make the most of every single second he's alive. It's a chant to the people, a call to the punks, beer, music, and getting lost to find oneself.»

César Gándara

«Alejandro Carrillo's literary experimentation goes beyond. His narrative is raw... It will, without a doubt, trap the melomaniacs and those who devour good literature.»

In 1999, he published his first novel, Un asesino solitario (Tusquets, 1999), which immediately placed him as “the first narrator who rightly gathers the effect of the drug trafficking culture in our country”, according to the Mexican critic Federico Campbell. With El amante de Janis Joplin (Tusquets, 2001) he won the XVII National Prize for Literature José Fuentes Mares, and with Efecto Tequila (Tusquets, 2004) he was a finalist in the 2005 Dashiell Hammett Prize.

He continued writing novels such as Cóbraselo caro (Tusquets, 2005), Balas de plata (Tusquets, 2008) for which he unanimously won the third Premio Tusquets Editores de Novela, which established him as a front-line writer in the Hispanic novel scene. After La prueba del ácido (Tusquets, 2010), Nombre de Perro (Tusquets, 2012), and Besar al detective (Literatura Random House, 2015), he continued with the series of detective Edgar “El Zurdo” Mendieta with Asesinato en el parque Sinaloa (Literatura Random House, 2017). The most recent installment of the Zurdo Mendieta saga is Ella entró por la ventana del baño (2021). His new novel La sirena y el jubilado will be published in 2026 by Alfaguara Mexico.

He has also published No todos los besos son iguales, which can be classified as young adult literature, published in 2019 by Alfaguara. In 2021 he received an honoris causa doctorate from the Autonomous University of Sinaloa. In 2022, Tenerife Noir awarded him with the 2020 Black and Criminal Award given his indisputable trajectory as a writer of thrillers.

A woman stands up against injustice. Carmen Larrañaga, a young politician with a promising future, encounters a hostile environment where she is surrounded by corruption, sexism, and violence. With an indomitable spirit and firm determination, Carmen fights to empower women and to protect them from violence. But a murder attempt leaves her on the brink of death. Néstor del Valle, a retired guard with a mysterious past, becomes her new Chief of Security, and together they will face the challenges ahead. A plot full of action and suspense, this story is a raw journey through the world of politics and justice. Can Carmen overcome the obstacles and achieve her goals? A battle for power and justice has begun in his political thriller. Survive or surrender. Corruption has no limits.

Press for Élmer Mendoza

«Understanding Mexico is an impossible task. But unraveling its vices and virtues is a novelist's task. Élmer Mendoza gives his beloved Zurdo Mendieta a vacation and gifts us an incomparable and brilliant portrait of a country very similar to our own. And we must celebrate this.»

Benito Taibo

«A masterfully and sensitively written noir novel about the various forms of violence that women in Mexico experience, from the bedroom to the main stage, but also about the power of friendship, which can redeem us in these dark times.»

Iris García Cuevas

«If twenty five years ago Élmer Mendoza renewed the language of the detective novel, he now repeats the accomplishment with two unlikely protagonists: a candidate to the Federal Congress with everything against her and her elderly bodyguard. The result? An explosive novel.»

Sebastián Salcido, aka el Siciliano, is free after spending over two decades in prison. He is the leader of a ruthless group of ex-militaries dedicated to drug trafficking. Far from being weakened by his time in jail, he is now searching ferociously for revenge against the former police commander who managed to get him arrested. Lefty Mendieta must now catch him, but sooner than later, he will discover that he is dealing with one of the most powerful and soulless rivals that he has had to face in his whole career as a detective.

As if things were not difficult enough already, Lefty Mendieta has another mission: finding the old love of Ricardo Favela, an eighty-six-year-old dying businessman. His dying wish is to see the woman with whom he lived a passionate affair twenty-two years ago, but Ricardo does not even know her name. Samanta Valdés, leader of the cartel of the Pacific and friend of Lefty, decides to help him since she seems to know who this woman is. El Siciliano has now become a relentless threat. What will be the result of this alliance against one common enemy? Lefty Mendieta is on a race against time and now he must face that infallible enemy that is death. Will he find Favela's old mistress? Maybe you will have to help him find the last clue.

«To read Elmer Mendoza is to submerge yourself in another language. The turns and expressions he makes use of in his writing transport you, as well, to a parallel reality.»

Julen Iturbe Ormaetxe

«Mendoza manages to recreate the environment in which the world of drug trafficking develops, interpreting it through the speech of his characters, the psychology of the crimes effectuated in those situations, which is a primary characteristic applied to the genre of noir literature.»

Carolina Alejandra López Herrejón

«One of the elements of the novel worth emphasizing is the presence of women, the construction of their psychology: complex, intelligent, conscious of their reality, but there is also the beauty proper of Sinaloa (the state where the novel takes place), the strength of their character.»

El Colegio de Sinaloa

«Élmer Mendoza concretizes a narrative in which we transit from love to hate, from passion to murderous violence, in a game that engages us; it seems impossible that amidst these damaged situations, great love stories can happen, amidst all that violence and death.»

Based on the notorious criminologist Alfonso Quiroz Cuarón, Alfonso Quevedo will be the first researcher in the country who conducts searches to solve crimes based on scientific techniques where he merges various specialties (psychiatry, forensic medicine, Lombrosian analysis) to psychologically profile criminals in his office, the Glass Tower.

To reveal the identity of the murderer of the soviet communist leader León Trotsky -the allegedly Belgian Jaques Monard-, who Quevedo suspects is using a false identity, joins forces, against his will at first, with Valentín Quintanilla -based on the legendary Valente Quintana, the most renowned police officer of the period-, who will investigate the old way (with torture and threats), resulting in many arguments due to their different methods.

This peculiar couple of detectives discovers that they are involved in a conspiracy that seems to originate in the highest circles of power in the country. To solve the mystery, they must learn that, by combining brain with muscle and violence, they have a small chance of breaking through the labyrinth of political forces, both national and foreign, that influence life in the country.

The Country of Spies explores a turbulent period of Mexican history where an intense atmosphere of international espionage comprised, at least, from the thirties to the fifties. During those years, Mexico became a strategic point for many spies. The country's innocence began to disappear when criminals such a mysterious femicide, an expert forger from France, agents from other countries' Secret Service, a religious conspirator, and a new shameless politician, were willing to do whatever it took to achieve their goals, including finding a way to eliminate those uncomfortable detectives.

As it happens with hundreds of Mexican towns —especially those lost in the desert area—, if we were to ask for Bavispe to someone who does not belong to the region, perhaps he would answer that he has heard the name once, but it is possible that he will not even be able to pinpoint its location. It would seem that in order to really exist in the national imagination, many of our peoples need a true bard that will make them his own, that will extract from them the passions, fears, desires and beliefs of their inhabitants and will make them known through his words.

This is what Carlos René Padilla has done in the tales that conform Bavispe, title that captures the story, and the stories, of that little town squashed by the heat and by an apparent monotony, to transform them in unforgettable narratives inhabited by ghosts and living beings ready to take away from us the placidity that comes from reading.

In the same manner of the best composers of corridos about towns, Padilla makes use of a language that in several instances is poetic but, at the same time, it is rooted in the orality to narrate, through a rhythm that is maintained from the beginning to the end of every piece; the book presents a variety of rural dramas that go from the presence of ghosts in the streets to the violence of accomplished vengeance, from the irony to the flirtation with the absurd, from love to hate, in a close, organic and cohesive universe: the one of the town itself through the years.

Press for Bavispe

«After reading these pages, not only will the readers know where Bavispe is, but also will be able to talk about it from a place of experience, knowledge and imagination.»

Eduardo Antonio Parra

«In this book, Padilla composes the image of a far-away town in the north of Mexico; the stories of Bavispe are an homage to its inhabitants, their traditions, the rural life and the own roots of the author.»

Infobae

«Because of the unity and balance of the collection of tales surrounding a mythical space, but that it is also real, because of the configuration of literary imaginaries and the polished prose that come together in the phantasmagoric of the 21st Century, Bavispe won the National Literature Award José Fuentes Mares 2022.»

Verónica Rosenthal, our bold investigative journalist, is going through a painful and uncertain phase: her father, Aarón Rosenthal, one of the most prestigious lawyers in Argentina, has a terminal illness. Additionally, her ex-partner Federico and her young colleague's baby is about to be born. Her world is destroyed, and Vero decides to press pause on her life to take care of Aarón and make the most of the time he has left. This is how she learns first-hand about the love story that her father lived with a beautiful militant in the 70's, the daughter of a military family and who hasn't been heard of in over 40 years.

On the other hand, Manuel Cobos García, a renowned doctor from Sevilla who lives in the US, adopts Aarón as his favorite patient and he moves to Buenos Aires, where he begins to spend time with the Rosenthal family. When he meets Verónica, an unforeseen passion erupts, and it will change their lives. The new chapter of the «Verónica is the girl who is always breaking the male-female paradigm», says the author. He elaborates on the sexual freedom this woman going on 35 years old experiences, who does not impose on herself the paradigm of defining herself in terms of her sexual orientation.»

Patricio Pidal / La nación

«This is the fourth thriller starring the journalist Verónica Rosenthal, 'female character who has the intention of restoring a little bit of truth and justice around a criminal act'. In the plot, there also leaks the theme of the violation to human rights perpetrated by Israel in Palestine.»

Silvina Frieria / Página 12

«The most important thing is to prioritize fiction over the historical, the journalistic.»

Emilia Racciati / Infobae

«It combines a plot that weaves the political-social actuality (sometimes it is the political corruption, the power of the Church, also the exploitation of the oppressed and machismo) with a repertoire of prototypical characters. But, in addition, it does not neglect the feminist reflection of Argentinian society that, in here, works as a theoretical frame.»

Débora Campos / Clarín

«A novel influenced by Boris Vian and Simenon who begins with a realist tone and ends with a Gargantuan erotic-police apocalyptic fest.»

Mariana Enríquez

«This is an excellent story, well told and translated, which sustains a high level of tension throughout. The reader is well aware of the risks to Veronica and those she co-opts in her research, and these culminate in violent and gripping action. In the background we have Buenos Aires, with great disparities of wealth and prevalent corruption, but a strong sense of life being lived to the full.»

As Eréndira Derbez mentions in the text that accompanies one of her vignettes, “There are days when I struggle to go out, when I get tired of giving explanations, when I feel small inside. A miniature being in a city of giants, I take tiny steps to reach a far away goal. I am going at the rhythm I can manage, taking baby steps.” We have all gone through similar adventures in our lives: childhood, changes, work, friendships and romantic relationships, and it is in this journey that we call “life” that each of these illustrations —and the words that accompany them—move forward with us.

Dibujo por no llorar is a book that speaks to us from the intimacy of silence, of loss and anxiety, and gives us hope when we experience those pains so we know that we can fly together, let go, forgive, and love, time and time again... Despite everything.

You have in your hands the book that millions of people demand on social media. A book that delivers the questions and answers that take up the most time, space, and characters in the cybernetic discussion, in the cafes and in the streets after each march against femicides and gender violence.

Anyone who wonders why they should not use the term feminazi, why so many men interrupt women, why there are men terrified by change, why we give more value to a statue than to the life of a murdered girl, how one can be egalitarian beyond discourse, will find here the keys to understanding and informed debate.

This is a book for those who argue that men have always been like this and that silent women look prettier, because when they are angry in the face of mass violence they lose their charm; That charm that gives so much peace of mind to a society focused on the emotional needs of men, of patriarchs, of chauvinists, of conservatives, of the handsome men of the left.

The Inquisition only exists in history books and museums; its institutional traces remain as evidence in the ruins of the old spaces it used. Its burning grounds are no longer there and the different cultural, sexual, and ideological realities remain alive in the midst of a universal struggle for the recognition of its value. We accept that we have advanced as a society and that today we no longer live in its shadow. Luis Huitrón, a specialist in the Inquisition, takes us from the origin of the Holy Office in Spain, the establishment of fear, the wars of the Church against other beliefs, to its development in New Spain, the missteps of religion and different cases of those accused and tortured by that terrifying instrument. The fear of the devil, of witches, of otherness, political alliances, the perpetuation of control, the submission of ways of life and thought were facts that permeated those centuries and that knowing and understanding them, allow us to live on the lookout so that this does not happen again.

The homeland is what we know about the homeland. And for those who have read Juan Rulfo, Elena Garro, Roberto Bolaño or Fernanda Melchor, places like Comala, Ixtepec, Santa Teresa or La Matosa are a central and endearing part of their Mexico.

Atlas of (another) Mexico invites us to explore an elusive—but completely true—map of the places imagined by our literature. Utopian cities. Cursed ranches. Ghostly towns.

This book is an atlas that serves both to find and to lose ourselves. A map that introduces us to the labyrinths of creation to show us a broader, more complete, more real image of Mexico.

The right is a political, cultural, economic, government, educational project and is above all of the above. The right in Mexico, with all its nuances, intensities and even divergences, is one and very cohesive: it has not renounced the old conservative project of establishing a Catholic government nor has it stopped fighting secularism, sexual education and the secularization of society. society, but has prioritized large economic interests, public and private, national and transnational, with a tendency increasingly inclined towards corruption. That's what the Right talks about. Power, corruption and deception, the last book in the trilogy by journalists Álvaro Delgado and Alejandro Páez Varela.

The family resorted to donations to transport one of the greatest Mexican revolutionaries, who died in captivity, from the United States. The new regime elevated Francisco I. Madero to the rank of martyr but denied recognition to a social fighter who had made the armed feat possible.

"What needed to be said is that the Mexican left is not a product of spontaneous generation, but of resistance. That it has survived for decades the persecution of the State, the appropriation of discourse, a party (the PRI) that devoured the Revolution of 1910 so as not to be forced to fulfill its postulates. A left that justifies itself in the deep inequality and in the desire to reverse it, to end it. A left that resisted murders and forced disappearance; that for a century has faced an overwhelmingly dominant, skillful and accommodating current of thought: the right", say the authors in this new book that comes after The Dispute over Mexico.

«The journalists analyze the leftist project set in motion by the president Andrés Manuel López Obrador and which the prominent figures of Morena define as social, progressive and popular, but that is constantly criticized for being anachronistic and authoritarian.»

Carlos Montesinos / Reporte Índigo

«Mexico lives an internal war over the control of the Nation. Two sides, two fronts, two armies with two opposing ideas of what a Republic is are looking to control its destiny.»

Cio Noticias

«Not only does the book contain interviews, but also an essay by Alejandro Páez Varela in which he reviews this discontinuous project that has been the Left in our country for decades until its success in 2018.»

Alfonso Aguirre

Alfonso Aguirre is a writer, entrepreneur, and content creator. Right after he graduated college from the University Tec de Monterrey, he published his first book Impossible Until It Gets Done, which quickly positioned itself in the list of best sellers on Amazon Mexico in the leadership category.

He currently has a community of over 1.7 million people on TikTok where he shares entrepreneurship tips, book recommendations, phrases, and personal experiences. With the support of this great community, his podcast “Alfonso Aguirre” has positioned itself on the trend charts on Spotify. In addition, he connects with a select group of people on a daily basis to carry out the 5 a.m. club routine. He is the CEO and Co-founder of “By the land”, a herbal supplement company, which achieved a valuation of millions of pesos thanks to the exponential growth in sales generated by his social networks and the support of his digital community.

While all this is happening, Alfonso has owned the phrase “Have breakfast, and eat your own projects”, putting it into practice with each of his own plans and making an allusion to the importance of dedicating yourself to you and your ideas.

For anyone who’s in search of their passion, their purpose, and their opportunity to change the world, this is the right book. This is a book full of stories that will offer you ideas, travel chronicles, reflections, quotes, tweets, a lot of inspiration, motivation, and topics that will give you a new perspective on how the world works, how creativity works, and above all, this book will become a personal journey to help you transform all of your “impossibles” into “possibles”.

Press for I Have Something to Tell You

«In a world filled with fear and uncertainty, Alfonso uses his platform to motivate others to discover their own talents and make the most of their passions, giving them tools and simple ideas from his own history, going from “it can be done” to how to get it done.»

José Caparros, transmedia editor in Forbes

«This book is for the brave ones that not only make questions, but that seek answers. Alfonso deals with two extremely important themes that are also very hard: knowing where you want to go in your life and giving yourself the space to decide and plan it.»

Héctor de la Hoya / Benshorts

«This book is addressed to all the people who have the intention of doing something and of answering once more the question: and now what’s next? That is a recurrent theme throughout the book, how once you have accomplished a goal, you have to ask yourself: and now what’s next?»

Xóchitl Martínez / El Informador

«The author highlights that it is not a manual to follow his advice literally, but that what he wanted to do was to give voice to his personal experience.»

Humanity is trapped inside a critical paradox: as a species and civilization we are entirely dependent on the natural resources we can reap from all around us. However, the economic model under which we live and work relies upon the exploitation of nature and the environment. We have become the main destructive force, responsible for the sixth mass extinction on the planet, we have diminished the atmosphere's capacity to regulate our climate, and we are exhausting the resources that are essential for our survival, like water. But are there any alternatives?

In this book, marine biologist Andrea Sáenz-Arroyo brings us a hopeful perspective. Inspired by a number of personal experiences in some communities in Baja California, where she witnessed how citizens self-organize in order to harness the ocean's resources in a responsible and sustainable way, the author set out on a journey around the globe in search of similar realities. In this way, she will lead us across Iceland, Galicia, northern Denmark, the coast of California, and the islands of Fiji, to show us proof of societies that have been able to care for the world's ecosystems and, at the same time, grow and prosper. Un mar de esperanza is a book for every person who is eager to find solutions to the environmental crisis we are living in; it is a breath of fresh air in the middle of this world-wide storm of hopelessness.

Press for A Sea of Hope

«In this book, the marine biologist and environmental economist explains to us, with simplicity, erudition and depth, the relationship between the defense of our environment and the old dispute between private and collective interests. A greater equity, balance and harmony in the society turn out to be the natural consequence of this organization.»

Alejandro Frank / Letras Libres

«People talk about small communities that develop an environmental intelligence, an ecological intelligence, which makes the author wonder why that is not the case in the cities.»

Pamela Cerdeira / MVS noticias

«It is a mandatory reading for all of us who worry about our world, about creating auto-sustainable economies, about leaving a better planet to the future generations. Hopefully, it will be a mandatory reading in high-schools and universities; it will become an inspiration to young people who will have a new way of looking into the future. There is so much to do; there is hope.»

La terraza literaria

«In this text, she explains how her interest in studying the problematic of a sustainable planet was born, relating it to her past, her childhood and her life, which made her get close to the concern for the environment and for understanding how we ended up turning our paradise into hell.»

Tibetan theories say that children choose parents. According to this vision of life, three months before the start of pregnancy, each soul makes the choice according to the lessons to be learned in that life.

Of the “divine” links on Earth, the most powerful is that of the Mother because it generates in us a deep learning, so painful that sometimes it hurts, so loving that, sometimes, it mutilates and overprotects. All in the name of love. This book does not intend to heal the wounds of the most important relationship of our existence, such as that of the mother with a child, but it does seek, without judgments, without prejudice, without resentment, the understanding of the causes and effects.

In short, this is a compilation of touching stories told from that wounded child who, through forgiveness, gets rid of his chronic pain and walks towards the path of emotional liberation, reconciliation and gratitude.

This book is a compilation of honest and moving stories that arise from the wounds of injured children, deep revelations, such as the fact that the presence of a father in the children is irreplaceable.

The father, the first love of the daughters, the first superhero of the sons, the one who scares the ghosts at night and pretends to be a horse by the day, riding with the child on the shoulders, the figure that is used as a threat when the Mother's authority becomes weak. Any wound in our hearts can be healed and transformed into a source of strength and inspiration to have a better quality of life and emotional fullness.

The path of forgiveness is traveled when it is understood, because understanding is one of the most luminous manifestations of love, that love that heals everything, that every cure, that feeds the best of ourselves.
